

Ted Carr was one of the most caring and inspirational people we know and has been a close friend and colleague since the early 1970s when he worked (with Bob) as a post-doc at the old Camarillo State Hospital. Fortunately, partly due to Ted's work in those early years, children are no longer placed in mental hospitals. Ted's energy, brilliance and enthusiasm were used to genuinely help to change the world to be a better place. His sense of humor brightened and livened meetings, speeches, and get-togethers.

Throughout his many major accomplishments, including being a (probably THE) major force in starting JPBI and APBS, his only motivations were to help improve the world. He never cared about increasing his fame or his wealth. His primary goals were to help people and to make the world a better place for individuals with disabilities to live. He did so with incredible humor, brilliance, scientific excellence (even perfection), and genuine caring. We cannot begin to say how much we miss Ted and his wife. This is such a needless tragedy. Thank heavens that the memories of Ted, his work and his family, are all truly happy ones. His life's work will continue changing the world for a very long time to come.
