

I saw Ted speak at the ASA conference in Phoenix last year, and a quote he gave will always remain imprinted on my mind. He said that many people ask him for one piece of advice from all the work he has done and his experiences in the field of behavior support. He said: "When people are happy, they behave better." As simple as this statement is, it has profound meaning to those that are working with people with autism, and allows us to never lose sight of the goal to ultimately provide them with a better quality of life and make them happier.

Elena L. Pollard, M.A.

Community School Co-Director

Research Coordinator

Southwest Autism Research & Resource Center (SARRC)